BILETA 2011

Harnessing technology's full potential; minimising potential threats

As the 21st century progresses, technology has become increasingly influential at a global level and is now a key regulatory and legislative priority. The international, instantaneous, ever-evolving nature of technology presents unprecedented opportunities for economic development, participation, commercial growth and education.

However, lucrative, pervasive innovation brings with it the potential for subversion and exploitation. This conference will explore the balance between supporting the positive development of technology for the global good, while reducing potential dangers and threats.

The conference aims to cover a range of contemporary themes, including Cyberwarfare, E-commerce, Fraud and the Internet, E-government, Hacking and viruses, Social Networking and many more.

Keynote Speakers:

- Professor Paul Maharg, Professor of Legal Education, Northumbria University
- Iain G Mitchell QC, UK representative on the Information Technology Committee of the Bars and Law Societies of Europe
